

The Georgia O'Keeffe Home and Studio

THE GEORGIA O'KEEFFE MUSEUM IS DEDICATED to perpetuating the artistic legacy of Georgia O'Keeffe, and to the study and interpretation of American Modernism. Through its collections, exhibitions, research center, publications, education programs, and custodianship of her historic properties. The Museum contributes to scholarly discourse and serves diverse audiences.

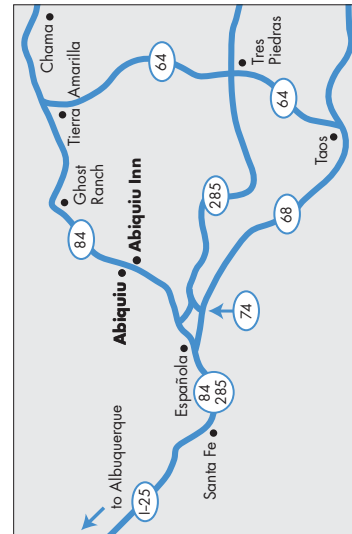

The Museum maintains the Abiquiu home of Georgia O'Keeffe for public tours on a limited basis. Small groups can visit the house and studio where O'Keeffe created some of her most famous paintings. To the extent possible, the house remains as she left it in 1984, when she moved from Abiquiu to Santa Fe, where she died two years later.

The Abiquiu home is one of two properties O'Keeffe occupied in northern New Mexico. In December 1945, she purchased the 5,000-square-foot Spanish Colonial-era compound, then in ruins, from the Archdiocese of Santa Fe. With her friend Maria Chabot, O'Keeffe spent the next three years restoring the 18th-century structure. By 1949, the property was habitable and O'Keeffe became a full-time resident of New Mexico, alternately living at her homes in Abiquiu and at Ghost Ranch. The Abiquiu house and surrounding views were a great source of inspiration to O'Keeffe, who produced works featuring the patio and black door, the cottonwood trees along the Chama River, the White Place, and the road to Santa Fe.
